

Abstract

An anti-wrinkle cosmetic product is disclosed for application on skin with wrinkles and bags so as to stretch and make the skin smooth. The product is a composition formed by at least a tensor agent including a first component silica and a second component water, both acting as active principle, and also including one or more excipients of the type commonly used in the cosmetic industry.